

"My wife and I recommend Dr. Miles' Nervine for Fits" and spasms. We have a boy who is nine years old now, and has had spasms since he was two years old. We had tried everything we knew and also took him to different doctors who said it would only be a short time until these fits would kill him. They would not allow him to go to school; finally my wife commenced to give him.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Now he seems completely cured and goes to school regularly and has not had a spasm for months.

Stephen G. Horlick, Ambridge, Pa. Spasms, fits, convulsions, St. Vitus dance and epilepsy frequently afflict children. If you have a child suffering from any of these diseases do not hesitate to give Dr. Miles' Nervine a trial.

An Exciting Adventure on the Great Peak which Presides Over Uncle Sam's Newest National Park.

Estes Park, Colo., Dec. 27.—The following letter addressed to Mr. John Dickinson Sherman, at this village, by Mr. D. W. Roper, of Chicago, gives the interesting details of an unusually dangerous ascent of Longs Peak, the giant of the new Rocky Mountain National Park, in the early part of last September.

Longs Peak, which is 14,225 feet high, was considered unclimbable for many years. Its summit is reached by passing from Boulder Field, which lies 12,000 feet up, through an opening in the rocky wall known as Keyhole, out upon the side of a sharp-angled slope covered with perpetual ice and snow, which slants from near the summit far down the mountain side to end in a nearly precipitous drop of a good deal more than a thousand feet into Glacier Gorge.

This is called the Trough and it is ascended by steps cut in the ice and snow, which are frequently obliterated by fresh snowfalls and must be removed continually. So far none of the hardy scalars of the summit, which include, by the way, an increasing number of women has lost control on this dangerous slope, though stories are whispered of slips caught just in time.

IN THE FACE OF A GALE.

Last summer the writer, while ascending the lower levels, met four young men, two of them with frozen feet, who had been held overnight on the summit by a snow squall obliterating the steps too late in the day to enable them to cut new ones on their descent.

"As there was a heavy snow on the summit of Longs Peak the night after I arrived at the Inn," writes Mr. Roper, "I was advised not to attempt the ascent for several days on account of the danger. I therefore waited until the fourth day after the snow, and made my ascent on Saturday, September 7, 1915. Starting about seven in the morning, I rode alone and without guide to Boulder Field, where the horse was left. I had some description of the appearance of the Keyhole, and it had been suggested that perhaps I would find difficulty in getting by the snow in the Trough and might do better to climb the boulders along the side. The geological map constituted the rest of my information about the ascent.

"Walking across Boulder Field I was somewhat sheltered from the wind which was blowing a gale from the southwest. On reaching the Keyhole I found the wind blowing against me so strong that I could hardly stand. I therefore retraced a few steps, sat down in the lee of a projecting rock, and ate a portion of my lunch. It was so cold that there appeared to be no prospect of rain at higher altitudes, and I therefore left at this point my knapsack, containing my raincoat, the remainder of my lunch and a few other incidentals.

CUTTING STEPS IN THE ICE.

"After leaving the Keyhole the general direction of the trail was indicated by a few cairns, but they were very scarce. The footprints in the snow of a party that had made the ascent the previous day were of considerable assistance and particularly so in the Trough, where I found their steps cut in the ice and crusty snow. I did not have to cut more than six or eight steps, and as I had nothing that could be used for the purpose except my hunting knife this was very fortunate.

"The ascent from the Keyhole to the summit required an hour and thirty minutes. In the Trough I was on all fours about half the time and did considerable climbing over and amongst the boulders. I would characterize the ascent as dangerous rather than difficult. There was no snow of any consequence except in the Trough, although the notes in the register on the summit showed that the party had found two inches on the summit the previous day.

"I had taken opportunity to enjoy the many magnificent views on the way up the peak, and it was fortunate that I did so, as I there found a storm gathering, the clouds being about on the level with the summit of the peak and snow starting to fall. I made a slight tour of the summit and then located and examined the register of the Colorado Mountain Club.

FIGHTING A SNOW STORM

"The snowfall rapidly increased, so that in twenty minutes after reaching the summit I started the descent, as I feared difficulty due to the snow covering the steps in the ice through the Trough. My fears were well founded. More than half of the steps were not only filled, but entirely covered and obliterated, so that it was impossible to locate them. There were several places from fifty to a hundred feet wide or more between the boulders along the side of the Trough where there was no sign of any footing, and if one should start to slip it was hard to stop. The only certain place appeared to be down near Glacier Lake, some 2,000 feet below.

"In these places I made steps by repeated kicks with my heel, at the same time making handholds higher up with my hands in the crusty snow.

"Fortunately, I was able to find the steps in that portion of the side of the Trough that was covered with ice. In one place I attempted to go down over a boulder by lowering myself feet first, but after getting so far that I swung freely below the chest found it impossible to find safe footing and had to climb up again over the boulder. As this boulder was located in a position with a steep crusty snow slope below it, the climbing up was attended with some danger, and especially so as the first part of the climbing consisted of a series of kicks and wriggles in an attempt to lift my clothing clear of the rough boulder and to move forward at the same time until I could bring my foot or knee into action.

"The trail was very dim after getting out of the Trough. Several times I found myself a considerable distance above the trail, and nearly descended through the transom, if there is one, instead of the Keyhole. The difficulties in the Trough and in losing the trail resulted in my making the descent to the Keyhole in an hour and thirty-five minutes, or five minutes longer than the time required for the ascent.

The five churches in town had Christmas trees Friday night. The attendance was good, the programs interesting and all who attended were remembered by Santa Claus.

Ernest Bell arrived in town Monday from Los Angeles, California. He has been at different points on the Pacific slope the past year and while he had a good job in person, business conditions have been quite dull in that region. He has returned to make this his home as he seems to have enough of travel and sight seeing. He has numerous friends here who will be glad to know he has decided to make this his permanent abiding place.

If you have not paid your subscription to the Chronicle why not do it NOW and at the same time take advantage of the big combination offer we are making. You can supply yourself and family with good reading for a whole year and save 95 cents over any other way of getting the same good reading.

In the issue of the Chronicle of December 15 we mentioned the fact that Aiden Benedict, Jr., of Pomona, had been fined for drunkenness a few days before. We also stated in that connection that the boy had been fined on a previous occasion for the same offense and that the fine had been paid.

The fine had to be paid at that time. We were not fully informed at that time. We have since learned that the person who secured the fine for the boy actually did pay over the money, but the boy had worked the money out so that in fact the boy paid his own fine. It is never the purpose of the Chronicle to put any person—more especially a young boy—in an unfair light and we only did so that time because we did not know the full particulars. We take this means of setting the matter right in the public mind as we are informed that the boy is honest and industrious but unfortunately has that weakness that he seems unable to overcome.

Don't fail to see Mary Pickford in "Little Pal" tomorrow night at the Mecca.

"Exploits of Elaine" will start Saturday night at the Mecca. The story will start in the Chronicle with the issue of January 12 and will catch up with the movie in a week or two.

Not for many years has there been more pleasant day preceding Christmas than last Friday and the merchants enjoyed a splendid trade as a result. Last year it will be remembered the weather was unusually bad and the merchants felt short of their usual heavy business.

A brief note was handed the Chronicle from the prisoners in the county jail in which they express themselves deeply grateful to the good people of Crossville for the presents given them. It seems the presents came as something of a surprise to those who are confined in the county bastille and for that reason were the more highly appreciated. Such things always help men to see the better side of life and we have no doubt that those unfortunate persons will be benefited and helped to live better after they are set at liberty.

From consulting the merchants of Crossville we find they had a very satisfactory Christmas trade; the best in many years. There was a tendency among the people to buy less of the cheap toys and other stuff that is so quickly destroyed and brings so little real pleasure or benefit. Useful articles were more largely purchased than usual and that means that the people decided to make their Christmas a sane as well as a happy one.

Attorney G. C. Peek has moved his office from the Keyes building to the Potter building, near the postoffice, up stairs in a front room, where he will be glad to welcome his patrons and friends.

A. L. Garrison recently lost one of his pure blood Hampshire male hogs in a very odd way. He had butchered near his big spring and had left some entrails in an old carbide can. The hog had tried to eat the entrails out of the can and in doing so got the can fastened on its head. In struggling to get free from the can the hog fell into the spring and was drowned. Mr. Garrison had missed the hog and did not know of its death until some boys discovered the hog in the spring with the can still on its head. The hog had been sold for $20 for delivery in a few days.

John Dunbar spent part of last week in Harriman the guest of his sisters, Mrs. E. C. Hughes and Miss Susie Dunbar.

John Rose, of the High School faculty, left Thursday for his home in Crab Orchard to pass the holidays.

J. J. Tabor was in from Creston Monday. Mr. Tabor was for many years one of the influential members of the county court and was always highly respected for his sterling honesty and sincerity of purpose. We have had the pleasure of counting him a Chronicle subscriber for over twelve years and hope to continue to be so favored for many years to come.

Upon inquiry of those who are buying ties we learn that the demand is expected to increase some with the coming of spring and toward fall the price may become a little better. Ties being one of our principle crops our people will naturally be glad of any change that will either stimulate the demand or increase the price.

At the Chronicle office you can get pen tablets, examination tablets, fountain pen ink in five and ten cent bottles, pocket note books, stenographer's note books, Crane's fine stationery in two-quire boxes and other stationery such as you do not find elsewhere in this county.

If there was a single family in Crossville that suffered for the want of a good Christmas dinner it was because our people did not learn of their condition. As late as Christmas morning one of our merchants called the editor over the phone and asked if he knew of any person or family in need. We were very glad to be able to say we did not. He replied: "Well, that sounds good, but if you hear of any one who is in need let me know as I want to do a little more for those less fortunate than myself than I have done." Such feelings as that can only come from one who enjoys giving and gets a very large measure of pleasure from helping the needy. Would that such a spirit was more general in every community.

If you want score cards and pencils, paper napkins, nice writing paper cut to special size come to the Chronicle office for them.

Mr. and Mrs. Baxter Burnett and two children went to Crab Orchard Saturday to visit Mrs. Burnett's parents, Prof. and Mrs. J. S. Cline.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Burlebach arrived from Chattanooga Christmas morning, to pass a few days with Mrs. Burlebach's mother, Mrs. Susie W. Dunbar.

Crossville passed the most quiet Christmas this time of any for many years, so far as drinking and rowdianism goes. But at the homes there were the usual dinners and happy gatherings of friends. All in all this is a Christmas to be long remembered by the people of Crossville and Cumberland county for so far as we have learned general good behaviour prevailed all over the county. The people are abundantly blessed with good things to eat and means to buy clothing and other comforts and needs. That they indulged themselves to a generous degree in all that is good and pleasant, but refrained from the worthless and hurtful seems evident, which is as it should be.
